

7 NEW WINERIES TO LOOK FOR
AT YOUR WINE SHOPAlma De Cattleya
(Sonoma County, California)

Bibiana González Rave knew from age 14 that she wanted to make wine, but, growing up in Medellín, Colombia, the closest she could get was studying chemical engineering. Finally, she left for France, earning a degree in viticulture and enology and working at top estates in Côte-Rôtie and Bordeaux. Fast forward: After stints at several Central Coast wineries, she founded Cattleya Wines (the cattleya orchid is Colombia's national flower). González Rave makes vivid, soulful wines at all levels—affordable ones under Alma de Cattleya and higher-end bottlings (like her stellar The Initiation Syrah) simply under Cattleya.

Wine to Try: 2018 Alma De Cattleya Chardonnay ($24)

This hard-to-put-down white manages the ideal California Chardonnay trick, which is to be rich in flavor without being heavy.
